

New Orleans painter J.B. Harter encapsulates a certain spirit of our modern gay world where males parade their physiques not as pumped-up dummies but as real males in search of other males. This collection of figurative work spans a period of over 30 years from the time he first recognized his own gayness. For much of his inspiration and study of technique the artist turned to the 19th century. His work does border on the academic as figures are executed with due regard to anatomical correctness rather than wish-fulfillment. His imagination is given full expression in his settings of the figures, their expressions and attitudes. The figures themselves are most often athletically lean, muscularly well-defined and well-hung and fit in perfectly with our contemporary ideal of the physically active male.
